"The Rich Do Not Wed, They Just Buy Partners," Declares Prof. Brooks, of "$25,000 Baby" Fame DAY OF JOY ENDS

Says Cupid Has to Run for His Life Before a Bombardment of Hard Dollars Nowadays.

LOVE NO LONGER A FACTOR.

Rich Women, Too, Buy a Husband as They Would a Pound of Tea or a Blue Ribbon.

"HE rich do not wed; they buy partners." Prof. John Graham Brooks, the former Harvard instructor, who declared a baby cannot be reared in America for less than $25,000, now announces that love and natural affinity have nothing to do with marriage among the wealthy. The men buy beautiful women straight out, while an heiress buys a husband as she would a pound of BOTH WANDERED AWAY.

Explored Wonderful Places on East Side as Two Anxious Mothers Waited.

Charley Kay and Johanie Maher had e time of their lives yesterday. Right ifter breakfast they ran away from me, and they didn't come back until t was almost night, and their mothers were worried half to death.

The two five-year-olds lived in the same house on Second avenue-No. 2475. Their fathers are meat handlers at one River, and the two kiddles had been practically raised together. They played on the fire-escape as bables, and when they got big enough to venture down in the street with the other kids they were still partners.

A Spirit of Adventure.

This summer they developed a spirit of adventure. They took to slipping off on extended voyages of discovery Several times they had been as far as the East River docks, where the big boys went in swimming, and there wer delightful lumber piles and brick piles

In the course of their wanderings they neard wonderful stories of a land far fascinating railroad tracks, over which small barefoot might skip at the peril of his life, and where there was also seautiful park full of squirrels, not to nention a very exciting bridge across ground over the water while ships and hings passed through.

So yesterday morning the two young argonauts decided to seek out the allur-ing land to the northward. They walked and walked and walked, going a tremenously long distance-fully ten blocks, I must have been-but in the end they felt repaid. For according to Johnnie Maher's account they found the railroad yards and the bridge that turned around hem some lunch out of a basket at ome, tired to death and dirty as pigs, had been watching for Charley and John-nie. Mrs. Kay had finally gone around to the East One Hundred and Twentysixth street station to ask the police to look for the two kids. Mrs. Maher, staying behind to mind the dinners for both households, was hanging out of her front window, four stories up, watching
